Funeral HOMES

Compassion. Dignity. Respect.

Funeral home service offerings: an overview

A funeral home's mission is to support you and your family as you carry out the various tasks associated with the loss of a loved one. Its services often extend beyond celebrating the life of the deceased. Here's an overview of the many services a funeral home can provide for you.

- Cremation or aquamation. Traditional cremation or alkaline hydrolysis — sometimes called aquamation — allows you to put your loved one's remains to meaningful use, such as making a keepsake from the ashes.
- Commemorative objects. A funeral home can help you preserve the memory of your loved one with personalized jewelry, scarves, keepsake boxes and bookshelves.
- Advice and support. Most funeral homes can help you manage the many tasks and considerations associated with losing a loved one. For example, they can order burial arrangements, complete the paperwork and even handle the complicated task of repatriating the deceased from abroad.

Do you need support after the death of a loved one or want to prepare for your own eventual passing? Contact a funeral home in your community.

Preparation of the body. Funeral home staff are trained to prepare the body for viewing. This task is undertaken with the utmost respect and care.

Burial. Funeral homes offer various burial products, such as urns and caskets. They may also provide burial plots, mausoleums and columbaria as part of their services. An increasing number of establishments now offer ecological interment. Ask about the possibilities.
